Thanks

UNIBusiness thanks James H. Slife (Accounting '73),
CEO, Pioneer Graphics, for his company's generous support.
Faced with a professor about to faint in the rising heat, one student reacted with the decisiveness of a businessman responsible for thousands of employees in China: Mr. Tony Wu insisted that we move the class to his house. Grabbing materials and projector, we drove in two cars to regroup around his dining table, removing a painting so I could project my slides on the wall. At noon Mrs. Wu ordered pizza.

Our Hong Kong program began with some shaky moments. The first class was an all-day Sunday session in an office on the 41st floor of a Hong Kong skyscraper. Business people in Hong Kong work hard six days a week, but not on Sundays. That is why, as I learned the hard way, many skyscrapers’ air conditioning is programmed to stay off on Sundays, despite the stifling heat and humidity of a Hong Kong summer.

I had occasion to reflect on those early days as we held the first graduation ceremony for our MBA program this summer in Hong Kong. This marked the first commencement ever to be held away from UNI’s Cedar Falls campus.

The complex choice six years ago to deliver an MBA program in Hong Kong was driven by two external forces, one academic and the other economic. First, business had moved solidly into its globalization era, and we needed to ensure that our faculty and students were not left behind. Second, we had seen the first of massive budget cuts for Iowa’s public universities and needed to develop alternate ways of funding.

We navigated the bureaucratic and marketing minefields and managed to launch the program in less than a year. We began so small that our classes could fit around a dining room table, but in a few short years the program has established a comfortable niche in the fiercely competitive Hong Kong market. More than 60 professionals now hold an MBA degree from our Hong Kong program.

We are proud that we deliver value to business professionals in Hong Kong, but the benefits flow both ways. More than 30 faculty members have had the opportunity to travel to Asia, interact with executive-level students and, in many cases, develop meaningful contacts with Chinese professionals. The faculty bring knowledge, insights and connections back to Iowa’s undergraduates, providing much-needed exposure to global business, and all without using a penny from Iowa’s taxpayers.

The past few years have presented us with tough challenges, but we are meeting them in ways that bring us both academic and economic success.

Fall 2006
Thursday afternoons in the late 70s and early 80s were pretty much the same for Dan Leese (Marketing ’81) and his buddy, George Blough (Accounting ’81): trek to Johnson’s Bakery in Waterloo, load 60 dozen bagels (720 of the little beauties) into the ’67 Chevy van, head to the local food wholesaler, pick up 60 pounds of cream cheese, 60 pounds of strawberry preserves, drive back to the house they shared with nine other guys on Seerley Boulevard, and get ready for The Magic Hour.

At the stroke of 10, Dan and George turned into “The Bagel Guys” — those savvy entrepreneurs who sold bagels every Thursday, Friday and Saturday night until 2 a.m. from their mobile stand at the corner of College and 23rd streets at the top of The Hill. This venture was so successful that after graduation, Dan even considered franchising the idea and starting bagel stands on college campuses across the country.

“It was my first opportunity to do something entrepreneurial after college,” Dan said, “but I just wanted to get to work. And I didn’t feel like I knew anything. I mean, where would I start on something like that? There’s just a twinge of regret, but I’m kind of making up for that now.”

And how. In December 2005, Dan and business partner Doug Walker started Axiom Wine Company, a Sonoma, Calif. based business that focuses on the hottest growth and profit sectors within the industry — super-premium and luxury wine.

Axiom made a name for itself right out of the gates with its acquisition of the Red Truck and White Truck wine brands in Sonoma. The sale included the brand name, existing inventory and key brand icons. As part of the purchase agreement, the previous owner, Cline Cellars, continues to produce and supply the grapes for Red and White Truck; their winemaker continues to make the wines for both brands.

“As our cornerstone brand, Red Truck not only has a great track record, but it has enormous growth potential in the marketplace,” said Dan. Red Truck was a 150,000-case brand, which equated to $8 million in revenue in 2005. If all goes according to plan, within five years, Axiom will be a $100 million company with a value of nearly $250 million, making it the 12th largest wine company in the United States. In the short term, if Axiom meets its $16-$18 million revenue goal for this year, which it’s on track to do, it will become one of the top 30 wine companies in the U.S. in its first year of operation.

Axiom’s success comes not only from Dan’s nearly 25 years of experience in the wine and spirits industry, but from operating according to what he believes is the future business model within the industry: establish long-term contracts with growers who own the vineyards and grow the fruit, instead of tying up a lot of capital in buying vineyards. “The trick is to not get in a position where you have all of your money tied up in hundreds, potentially thousands, of acres, and then have no money to market the brands,” he said. “What you need is to control the source with long-term contracts. You don’t need to own the dirt.”

This fall, Axiom launched a wine called Picket Fence, a super-premium brand that includes a Chardonnay and a Pinot Noir from one of the world’s premier appellations — the Russian River Valley in Sonoma County.

In spring 2007, Axiom will unveil a Chianti, a Pinot Grigio and a Tuscan Red created through a joint ownership venture with the largest premium wine producer in Italy. This Tuscany-based producer owns the winery, the vineyards and a portion of the brand, while Axiom owns a majority of the brand and has exclusive rights to distribute the wine in North America.

Red Truck, a medium-bodied blend of red Rhone and Bordeaux grapes, has earned dozens of awards and accolades, including being named one of Wine Spectator magazine’s “Best Value” selections for the 2002 vintage. White Truck, made from Sauvignon Blanc, Pinot Grigio, Chardonnay and Viognier grapes, is a bright fresh wine with grapefruit, gooseberry and orange flavors.
From Bread to Wine

Dan’s interest in the beverage alcohol industry began during his freshman year at UNI when he took a marketing research class and wrote a paper on how breweries market their products on campus. After talking with students, one thing became very clear: Coors Brewing Company was doing a poor job. Buoyed by his faith in his findings, Dan sent a copy of the paper to the local Coors distributor. After meeting with the distributor and the Coors college marketing representative from Golden, Colo., Dan was offered the job as UNI’s Coors campus rep to help the brewery improve its marketing efforts.

In this position, which he held along with his late-night bagel gig and his news director job at on-campus radio station KCRS, Dan learned about the beverage alcohol industry, how consumers view products, and the importance of positioning and branding. “The campus rep position is what really set me on my way,” Dan said.

After graduating in 1981, Dan landed a job with the Stroh Brewery Company in Detroit. In 1987, he moved to Brown-Forman in Louisville, Ky., one of the largest American-owned wine and spirits companies, to become marketing director for Korbel Champagne. Dan held various positions within Brown-Forman, including vice president of marketing, senior vice president and general manager of Fetzer Vineyards, and executive vice president, managing director of Brown-Forman’s U.S. wine business.

In January 2001, Dan accepted the position of senior vice president, general manager of the premium wine division at Beringer-Blass Wine Estates (now Foster’s Brewing Group Limited). Two years later, he was promoted to president of Foster’s North American business. After a long and illustrious career of working for others, in 2005, Dan realized his dream of starting his own wine company.

Meaningful Meeting

Dan met business partner Doug Walker five years ago when they worked together at Beringer-Blass, where Doug was North American finance director. For a couple of years, the two talked about starting their own wine company. One day they finally made it official.

The partners now employ 15 marketing, finance and administrative staff members in Sonoma including Dan’s wife, Katy, who is part of the marketing staff; Axiom’s salespeople are located across the country. “It’s fun building a company, because we’re able to create our own culture, our own way of working,” said Dan. “We work our tails off, but we have a lot of fun.”

The name Axiom was chosen because of the meaning of the word: a self-evident or universally recognized truth. Throughout the business-building process, Dan came up with a few axioms of his own for people who want to start their own business.

First, establish your business based on your current culture, but keep an eye toward the future. “Ask yourself, ‘Will what I’m setting up now still work when we’re at $100 million?’ If not, you may want to rethink your plan.” Second, hire great people. “I chose to spend money on hiring nine seasoned sales and marketing professionals. I could have had greater coverage by hiring more people with less experience for less money, but I would have had turnover. I’m building the company for the long term.”

Third, choose a business partner carefully—someone who will complement your skills. “You need to pick a business partner like you pick a husband or wife. It’s just that intimate.” And finally, revisit your business plan often. “You’ve got to constantly ask yourself, ‘Are we following the plan?’ and ‘Is the plan still valid?’ You can get swept up in the whole startup mode, and what goes away are the disciplines needed to run the business. You can’t allow that to happen.”

Learning these disciplines was definitely part of Dan’s undergraduate education. “I owe most of what I know professionally to the eye-openers I had in Cedar Falls, which taught me to view the possibilities broadly,” he said. “I loved UNI. It was a terrific four years of my life.”

As an undergrad, Dan knew he wanted to get into the beverage alcohol industry. He never imagined, however, that he’d own a wine business in California. “It’s the greatest thing that could have ever happened for me,” he said, “that is, next to meeting and marrying my ‘Hawkeye’ wife, Katy!”

With an MBA From UNI, You Can Go Anywhere

By Ruth Goodman, ’82

Olga Pavlikova beamed as she extended her hand to receive the diploma that affirmed the successful completion of her graduate studies in International Business at the University of Economics in Bratislava, Slovakia. Two months later, she was on a plane, soaring above the lush valleys and majestic mountains she knew so well, heading for a country she had never visited to attend a university she knew only by reputation. In the fall of 1999, Olga Pavlikova (MBA ’03) became a UNI student.

“Studying in the United States was attractive to me because professors encourage critical thinking, not just the memorization of facts,” said Olga. “American universities have a great reputation in Europe, and their graduate certificate opens the door to the most prestigious employers.”

It’s no secret that UNI’s MBA program is highly respected both in the United States and around the world. Yet Olga’s story begs the question: How did a young woman in Central Europe hear about UNI? Quite by accident, really.

Olga knew she wanted to pursue an MBA after receiving her degree in International Business. She looked at George Soros University and Central European University, both in Budapest, Hungary, which is 100 miles east of Slovakia. Yet she became increasingly intrigued by a university that was a bit further away—4,857 miles, to be exact—with an internationally recognized, accredited MBA program. Olga heard about this university from Kurt Meredith and Jeannie L. Steele, faculty members from UNI’s College of Education. Kurt and Jeannie were in Bratislava leading a collaborative national education restructuring program between the college and the Slovak Republic called the Orava Project; Olga worked alongside this pair as a project assistant.

Online research and her positive interactions with the visiting faculty members prompted Olga to apply to UNI, then make the 14-hour plane trip from Slovakia after her acceptance. “Coming to UNI for the first time was like a return to friends,” she said.

“UNI is a good place for international students to gain an education, and Cedar Falls is a small, safe, quiet town that’s ideal for studies,” she said. “I was also exposed to the U.S. culture and its inherent values of openness, strong sense for fair play, can-do mindset and its orientation on results. Finally, of course, I could learn English, which is key in everyday communication.”

A week after obtaining her MBA, Olga traveled to Prague, the capital city of the Czech Republic, for several job interviews arranged by a Prague recruitment agency. She interviewed with GE Money and accepted an offer to become a financial planner and accounting analyst. Also known as GE Consumer Finance in some parts of the world, GE Money is the personal financial services division of Stamford, Conn.-based General Electric.

“I view my return home after my studies as having the best of both worlds,” said Olga. She had thought of staying in the U.S. after graduation to solidify her knowledge and gain an American perspective on the world of work, but her current situation is even better. “I received an excellent education from a prestigious business school, I am close to my family in a familiar cultural setting and I got a job with one of the best U.S. companies.”

GE Money has been in the Czech and Slovak markets since 1997 and has three subsidiaries: retail and commercial banking services, sales and financing, and auto leasing. GE Money can be found in 50 countries and generates 75 percent of its net income outside the U.S.

For three years, Olga served as a project manager in the operations department of GE Consumer Finance in Prague. In this position, she led projects to improve productivity through process redesign and digitization, and implemented sales concepts into underwriting and customer service functions. She is now in charge of a project with the goal of building an operations center near Prague by 2008 that will accommodate 500 additional employees.

In July of this year, Olga was promoted to the position of simplification manager and is responsible for cross-functional simplification initiatives. Within five years, Olga hopes to lead a re-engineering team of project managers focused on improving customers’ experiences with GE and its products. “Project management roles are fascinating,” said Olga. “Inventing ways to make things work better with less is always present and critically important.”

Olga attributes her success to the strong business training she received at UNI. “Enthusiastic professors, such as Tony McAdams and Taggart Frost, led discussions that encouraged me to think about things in new ways, which differed from the professors I’d known in Slovakia. I was able to apply what I was learning to real-life business situations, which provided a great foundation for building my career.”

In June, Robert Koob presided over the MBA graduation ceremony in Hong Kong as his final official act as president of UNI. In his first official act as UNI’s new president, Ben Allen signed a partnership agreement with Shanghai DianJi University.

The Hong Kong MBA Program

Since 2003, students have been earning their Master of Business Administration degree from UNI without ever setting foot on campus. Instead, our faculty travel to Hong Kong to teach courses in Wan Chai, the bustling business and entertainment center of Hong Kong. The Hong Kong MBA program is thriving, due mostly to positive recommendations from our highly satisfied alumni. Since its inception, 63 students have graduated from the Hong Kong MBA program, including Anna Leung Lee and her husband, Victor Lee (shown with UNI President Bob Koob, left). The Lees met during the MBA program, married in April of this year and graduated from the program in June.

To learn more about the UNI Business Hong Kong MBA program, visit www.mba.uni.edu.hk/.

Shanghai Partnership

UNI president Ben Allen and Shanghai DianJi University (SDJU) president Jianguo Xia signed a far-reaching faculty- and student-focused partnership agreement. Among other things, it allows SDJU business students to study two years in China followed by two years at UNI. SDJU students then return to Shanghai to finish a final requirement before earning a business degree from both institutions.

Although all of our students are encouraged to study or intern abroad, not everyone can. The UNI-SDJU partnership will bring a cadre of outstanding Chinese students to campus each year, ensuring that all of our students have an opportunity to build relationships with international business colleagues.

UNI Named a Best Business School

The College of Business Administration has been named an outstanding business school by The Princeton Review for its Master of Business Administration (MBA) program. The New York-based education services company selected UNI Business for inclusion in the 2007 edition of its book, The Best 282 Business Schools, now available online and in bookstores.

“The professionals who complete our rigorous program have every reason to be proud of their accomplishment,” said Farzad Moussavi, dean of the College of Business Administration. “Their degree is from a university that is ranked among its peers as one of the best, a business school that is considered one of the best in the world by AACSB International - the accrediting organization for schools of business -and a program that, according to The Princeton Review, is among the best in the country.”

A survey of students enrolled in the program provides data used to select the top MBA programs. According to The Princeton Review, “Combining state-of-the-art facilities, ‘impossibly friendly’ faculty, and a low, public school price tag, it’s no wonder that UNI students feel theirs is ‘the best business program in the Midwest.’”

One student said that UNI offers “a friendly environment balanced with a high caliber of academics, which creates a small college feel with university opportunities.” The result is an academic experience rating of 89, a score usually reserved for elite institutions.
Women on Top of Accounting

Quite a few of our most outstanding Accounting alumni are women. Having heard so much about the “glass ceiling” and the “old boy network” keeping women from becoming partners, vice presidents and CFOs, we asked a few of our alumnae whether they had encountered gender bias as they rose to the top of the financial services industry. Their answer was a qualified no. What had mattered most, in their personal experience, were the technical competencies gained in a solid Accounting program, well-developed interpersonal skills, a willingness to exhibit leadership, and an ongoing effort to maintain a healthy balance of family and profession. Here’s their advice to young women - and men - who want to make it to the top in any field.

Mary (Voss) Jeffries
(Accounting ’79)
Chief Operating Officer
Petters Group Worldwide, Minneapolis

“I acknowledge that gender bias is an issue in certain environments, but for me, it never has been. I’ve been fortunate and have always had gender-neutral superiors who are very accepting.

“In my experience, I’ve found that for anyone to be successful in financial services, technical training has to be one of your core skills. Flexibility and the ability to multitask have also been important—especially in public accounting where you move from client to client. You have to be able to start and stop and react to situations as they come up.

“Prioritizing goes right along with that. For me, prioritizing might actually be more about balance and includes taking time for my husband and two children, who have always been part of my work life. This is healthy and sends a good message as a leader in an organization.

“Time management, setting goals and setting priorities definitely helped me be successful when I was at UNI. Faculty members did a marvelous job guiding me and giving me the bumpers to be successful, but they certainly didn’t hold my hand. I really had to work and take charge of my future. They just gave me the ability and tools to do it!”

Mary (Beenken) Barnes-Coffin
(Accounting ’83)
Executive Vice President Loan Servicing and Post Closing,
Wells Fargo Home Mortgage, Des Moines

“My experience at UNI provided me with great ‘street’ roots, giving me a terrific foundation on which I have been able to build my career. From there, my success as a leader in the financial services industry brings three things to the top of my mind: 1) leadership skills; 2) customer focus; and 3) balanced goals. Foundational leadership skills are always a necessity. Those include vision, carrying out the career goals.

54% of new public accounting hires are female.

Accounting Grads Adapt to Stay on Top

The figures are out, and once again, UNI ranks in the top 10 with 26.6% of first-time candidates passing all sections of the annual CPA exam, smashing the national average of 4.6%. With a No. 5 ranking, our 2004 alumni placed the accounting department in the top 10 nationally for the 11th consecutive year, surpassing much larger schools, schools that grant advanced graduate degrees and schools that pull the best students from much larger populations.

UNI’s pass rate consistently falls above 35% and often is higher than 40%. In 1997, 2000 and 2002, UNI’s pass rate ranked No.1 in the nation.

The real news, however, is that UNI grads have continued to
Jean (Rogers) Trainor
(Accounting '75)
President and CEO
Veridian Credit Union, Waterloo

“What are the keys to success? Obviously, the accounting and analytical skills I gained at UNI were helpful to start. What I found as I gained experience is that people skills, oral and written communication skills, leadership skills—the ability to work together in a team environment—are just as important. It’s also important to surround yourself with talented people who can work together. We’re more successful in a team environment than we are on our own.

“I love my career, I love my work, I love the people I work for and I think it’s important to have other facets of your life that are also priorities to create balance. For example, being a mom has helped me become a better CEO, and I think I’m a better mom because I am a CEO. My son, who happens to have some disabilities, has taught me a lot about acceptance and belonging and community. Accepting others for who they are and accepting different ways of thinking and different backgrounds are critical in the workplace.”

Diane (Crane) Bridgewater
(Accounting and French ’85)
Vice President and CFO
Life Care Services, Des Moines

“Regardless of where you work, what your industry, or whether you’re male or female, to be successful, a prerequisite is competency in your discipline. Beyond that, it’s important to take initiative, be self-motivated, and have a positive outlook and approach to absolutely everything you do. I know that sounds simplistic, but I find these traits in most successful leaders.

“I can say with a resounding ‘yes’ that UNI played a part in my ability to do all that I’ve done to date. Beyond providing me with competency in my discipline, UNI provided the environment to foster leadership tenants. I think it relates to the size of the university, the class size, the caliber of professors and the caliber of fellow students. It’s one thing to have professors motivate you. It’s quite another to have peers who push you just as much.

“Professors challenged us in class, put us on the spot and got a few debates going. That helped build confidence and the ability to stand firm in our beliefs, which was excellent preparation for when we left the university.”

Ellen (Curry) Valde
(Accounting ’85)
Partner and Market Industry Leader
PricewaterhouseCoopers, Minneapolis

“Being successful really comes down to how you relate to people. It’s how you treat others and how you lead by example that’s most important. You also need to recognize the differences in others and understand what another person might be feeling.

“Finding balance is also important to career success. And we all find it in different ways. I’m married and have two children, and I feel like I have a life and a career. I put in my children’s activities on my schedule as meetings. They are as high a priority as my client meetings. That’s one of the flexibilities within public accounting. People understand that you work hard, and yet you’re committed to your family.

“My degree from UNI has also been integral to my success. UNI does a terrific job caring about students, teaching them to work hard, and helping them realize that by working hard, you can have success that results in a great career.

“I really felt as if people cared about me at UNI. Accounting professors Andreessen, Abraham and Nicholas knew me personally. They showed great interest in my success. I remember the feeling of confidence they instilled, which helped me be successful.”

The state of Iowa is #1 in CPA pass rate performance.

lead the country through landmark changes in the CPA exam. With this examination, the format changed from a twice-per-year, pencil-and-paper exam to a computer-adaptive format that is now offered continuously for a two-month period each quarter. The content of the exam changed as well, with law topics now combined with taxation and a new section to cover non-accounting topics, called Business Environment and Concepts.

Over the years, UNI’s Accounting program has earned a reputation for academic rigor and hard-working students. We are pleased to demonstrate that our program and students can also adapt and perform at the highest levels in a dynamically changing environment.
Celebrating Student Excellence

Purple and Old Gold Award

Each year, students who display “meritorious scholarship or conspicuous achievement” are recognized with the Purple and Old Gold Award.

Accounting

STACY NELSON

Hometown: Cedar Falls

Current Position: Administrative accounting assistant at Community National Bank in Waterloo

Future Goals: To earn my master's degree and to have a successful career in accounting where I can continue to learn and grow both professionally and personally.

UNI Activities: Beta Gamma Sigma honor society, Sigma Iota honorary community service organization, Accounting Club

Favorite Class: Auditing. It was challenging, but Professor Ron Abraham kept it interesting, and I learned so much.

Economics

AARON POPP

Hometown: Cedar Falls

Current Position: Ph.D. student in Economics at The Ohio State University

Future Goal: To find a research position in academia or with the government. Leaning toward specializing in an applied microeconomics field and econometrics.

UNI Activities: Iowa High School Model United Nations, Economics Club, Monopoly Club

Favorite Class: Intermediate Math Analysis. It was a difficult but enjoyable class that provided me with vital mathematical techniques and training for graduate school.

Business Teaching

KELLI MCCAULEY

Hometown: Manson

Current Position: 6th-8th grade technology and at-risk instructor at Carroll Middle School in Carroll

Future Goals: To continue teaching at the middle or secondary level, and work toward my master’s.

UNI Activities: Beta Gamma Sigma and Phi Omega Pi honor societies, Iowa Business Education Association, intramurals

Favorite Class: Legal and Social Environment of Business with Professor Heidi Noonan-Day. This class related the concepts to “real-life” situations, which piqued my interest. I try to use the same approach and teaching style in my own classroom.

UNI Activities: Beta Gamma Sigma and Phi Eta Sigma honor societies, Economics Club, Financial Management Association, Golden Key Honor Society, Intramural Manager, UNI Tennis Club

Favorite Class: Advanced Financial Management with Dr. Zaman. He encouraged us to think “outside the box,” and he answered complex problems that many finance professionals face.

Management Information Systems

ANDREW SCHULTZ

Hometown: Spirit Lake

Current Position: Systems administrator at The State Bank in Spirit Lake

Future Goals: To start out in the information systems realm and possibly move into a management position.

UNI Activities: Management Information Systems Association, intramurals

Favorite Class: Either Business Programming or Database Management and Theory. In both classes, I got great hands-on experience in using databases to develop dynamic Web sites.

Marketing

LORI CAVANAUGH SCHMITZ

Hometown: Charles City

Current Position: Buyer at Bossard Industrial Products in Cedar Falls

Future Goal: To obtain my real estate license.

UNI Activities: American Marketing Association and Mu Kappa Tau Honor Society

Favorite Class: Real Estate Finance. It’s an extremely challenging class, and Dr. Art Cox gets his students engaged in the material.

Management

NATHAN WITTMACK

Hometown: Linn Grove

Current Position: Team leader at the Target Distribution Center in Cedar Falls

Future Goals: To stay in the Cedar Falls area for a while and advance within Target, if the opportunity comes along.

UNI Activities: Intramurals, Economics Club, Baseball Club, BASIC, Omicron Delta Kappa and Beta Gamma Sigma honor societies, attending UNI sporting events

Favorite Class: Principles of Macroeconomics, because it was the first class in the business college, and it persuaded me to double major in Econ.
Student Entrepreneur of the Year

The John Pappajohn Entrepreneurial Center Student Entrepreneur of the Year award is presented to a UNI Business student entrepreneur who owns and operates an independent small business. Carlos Arguello, a senior marketing major from Carroll, is a tenant in the JPEC Student Business Incubator, which provides new student entrepreneurs with office space, equipment and expert advice from JPEC staff members.

Carlos started a Spanish/English translation and interpretation business that serves the banking, medical and legal industries. He’s exploring other business opportunities in the incubator program, including developing a Spanish-language newspaper for western Iowa and starting a Spanish-language radio station.

Carlos was involved in UNI’s Collegiate Entrepreneurs Organization and was a regional winner in the John Pappajohn New Venture Business Plan Competition. He is a member of the Iowa Council of International Understanding and volunteers his time to El Centro Latinoamericano helping new immigrants.

During the academic year, Carlos worked part time at Veridian Credit Union and provided Spanish-language services.

Wall Street Journal Award

Initiated in 1948, this award recognizes undergraduates in each state who display high academic achievement in business-related programs. Gwyn Vanderweerd, Economics

Hometown: Sully

Employment: Assistant director at Lake View Camp in Pella

Future Goals: To live in Iowa and continue to work at Lake View Camp.

UNI Activities: Economics Club, Economics tutor, Phi Eta Sigma and Beta Gamma Sigma honor societies, intramurals

Favorite Class: Legal and Social Environment of Business with Professor Heidi Noonan-Day, which involved a lot of class discussion and debates. The material was always interesting, and I learned a lot about the legal system.

President’s Council Plans Graduation Celebration

Students, their family members, their friends, and members of the university and business communities recognized the outstanding achievements of this year’s graduating seniors during the UNIBusiness Graduation Celebration at the Gallagher-Bluedorn Performing Arts Center on the UNI campus. The Graduation Celebration was planned by the Presidents’ Council, which is comprised of the presidents of all UNIBusiness student organizations.

Student Organization of the Year

The International Club of Business Students promotes an educational and cultural environment in which UNIBusiness students with an interest in international business can share ideas and experiences. The club also gives international students the opportunity to network and to learn about international business concepts from American business students. The ICBS received this award for its numerous outreach activities, including writing the training manual Business for Beginners, which helped students in Kopeyia, Ghana, establish and operate a new village store.

Two individuals exhibited such outstanding service to the College this year that a double award was made.

Service
JERRY SMITH
Management

Jerry Smith came to UNI with an Ivy League education, years of strong research and teaching experience, and an intense desire to improve the quality of our educational outcome. Within the College, Jerry is in charge of an initiative that measures what students have learned to determine whether we’re accomplishing what we set out to do. At the university level, Jerry re-energized efforts to improve the quality of UNI’s liberal arts experience.

Service
ART COX
Finance

Art Cox was selected for his outstanding contribution to our Real Estate program. When Art took over the program in 1995 there was no Real Estate major, and only about 20 students were concentrating in the Real Estate emphasis. Today, approximately 190 students major in Real Estate, the fastest growing major within the College. Art has cultivated solid relationships with employers, which translates into success for students. More than half of our Real Estate majors have meaningful internships in their field before they graduate, and approximately 75 percent have received a job offer prior to graduation.

Teaching
BRYCE KANAGO
Economics

Bryce Kanago sets high grading standards and gets high student ratings—a perfect combination. His classroom presentations are fast-paced and fully engage students in discussion. On a faculty assessment, one student wrote, “Dr. Kanago is actually excited about economics and loves to teach. Plus, he wants us to learn it as well. He really seems interested in student learning and isn’t just here for a job.” A professor can receive no higher praise than that!

Outstanding Contribution to Business and Community
TAGGART FROST
Management

Taggart Frost has participated in our Executive Development Center (formerly the Management and Professional Development Center) programs since the late ’80s. Prior to his retirement in May, Taggert probably taught more classes for the Executive Development Center and reached more business managers than any other faculty member at UNI. Taggart has taught numerous sessions related to strategic planning, leadership, goal setting and conflict management, among others. Taggart has continually been one of the Executive Development Center’s highest-rated instructors and one of the key contributors to its excellent reputation.
Students’ Choice
STEVE CORBIN
Marketing

Each year, UNI Business students cast online votes to select the person they believe is the most outstanding teacher within the College. This year’s recipient is Steve Corbin. Steve joined the UNI faculty in 1975 and has been a faculty advisor for several student groups, including Mu Kappa Tau Honor Society and the UNIBusiness Presidents’ Council. Mu Kappa Tau was recently recognized as the most active student chapter in the country.

Teaching Innovation
Gerald Smith
Accounting

Gerald Smith has been at UNI since 1989 and teaches in the Auditing and Financial Accounting areas. Gerald received this award for developing a course in fraud examination. In response to some of the audit failures making the news in recent years, universities have been called upon to provide additional instruction in this area of accounting. Gerald’s proactive approach in developing this course put UNI ahead of many other schools.

University Book & Supply Outstanding Teacher
STEVE HARRAST
Accounting

Each year, University Book & Supply presents an Outstanding Teaching Award to one of our newer faculty. This year’s recipient is Steve Harrast who came to UNI in 2003. Steve received his doctorate in Accounting from the University of Memphis. His primary teaching area is Accounting Information Systems.

UNIBusiness Thanks University Book and Supply for providing this recognition of our junior faculty.

Rick Francis Joins UNIBusiness

UNI offered Rick Francis a visiting position when Hurricane Katrina shut down the University of New Orleans, where he was an assistant professor of Accounting. As luck would have it, the department was soon conducting a national search for a new faculty member. Rick decided to apply, and the accounting department was delighted to find that this superbly qualified candidate was ready to make UNI his permanent home. Rick is now an assistant professor teaching Financial Accounting Theory and Intermediate Accounting. His research interests include market-based accounting research, financial accounting and cash flow. Rick received his B.B.A. in Accounting, an MBA, and his Ph.D. in Accounting, all from the University of Oklahoma. Rick is also a CPA.

Entertainment during the Graduation Celebration was provided by three UNIBusiness students. These students were chosen during a talent search conducted by the College of Business Administration’s Presidents’ Council, which includes the presidents of all UNIBusiness student organizations. From 18 entries, three were chosen to perform and receive a $700 cash prize.

Sober Tuesday, which includes freshman Accounting major David Keim and band mates Jeremy Loving, Cole Taggart and Gabriell Tee, rocked the auditorium with music and vocals.

Freshman Accounting major Lu Ning mesmerized the audience with music on the Chinese harp.

Senior Management major John Sparland shared his vocal talents and even wrote a song to honor Linda Corbin, coordinator of student advising for the College of Business Administration.

Balanced against UNI’s reputation for great teaching is an equally impressive story of great scholarship. UNI Business faculty contribute to Iowa’s economy and student learning, as well as to knowledge in their own disciplines, with research that is both innovative and applicable. This year’s Faculty Scholarship Award winner, Shashi Kaparthi, associate professor of Management Information Systems, was chosen for an intellectual contribution that stands out for its applicability to real business decisions.

Shashi is fascinated with information technology and especially with its potential to make individuals, businesses, and society more effective and efficient. He began applying neural networks, an artificial intelligence methodology, to solve business problems while a doctoral student at SUNY, Buffalo. That methodology has remained the focus of his research since arriving at UNI in 1992.

Artificial neural network models were originally developed to explore how the human brain works, but Shashi realized they could be harnessed to analyze business data for decision-making. His work, published in a series of articles over the past 15 years, demonstrates, for example, that neural networks can mimic the human brain’s capability for recognizing patterns in images. A decision-system that recognizes patterns can be “taught” to do tasks. For instance, the system can recognize patterns within product components, allowing production engineers to streamline a manufacturing process. One system learns from surgical results and suggests possible improvements in the surgeon’s choice parameters for future surgeries.

A key to great scholarship is staying at the cutting edge, and Shashi’s work has also kept up with a fast-changing field. With the growth of the Internet, Shashi began studying the use of neural networks in the design of Web-based decision support systems. To help practitioners effectively use the technologies, Shashi co-authored two books that explain how to use the ColdFusion Server Language to design and implement dynamic Web sites and e-commerce systems: Macromedia ColdFusion and An Introduction to Web Programming. These books are used in classrooms across the country, as well as by professional developers who create Web sites for business. The programming tools allow the Web to be used as much more than a simple communication medium; they create Visual Interactive Explanations that can improve decision-making. Thanks to Shashi’s active scholarship, UNI Business students are able to take a course that prepares them to hit the ground running, armed with some of the most up-to-date tools in the field of information technology.

Connect with Shashi at Shashi.Kaparthi@uni.edu.
Distinguished Professorships and Chairs

Enhancing the Impact of Faculty

A named chair or professorship honors both the generosity of a donor and the faculty member who holds it. The ultimate beneficiary, however, is the student.

Professorships and chairs allow faculty to concentrate on developing new educational opportunities for our students. Mir Zaman, for example, who holds the Carl Schweser Professorship in Financial Analysis, has been able to devote time to the CFA® Level I Study Seminars, focusing his considerable expertise in finance toward a program that sets our graduates apart.

Some professorships and chairs provide students direct financial support. Undergraduates who have done research suitable for the bilateral research exchange, for example, know that the Lawrence Jepson Professorship of International Economics will support their travel to Moscow, where they are to present their work to their Russian counterparts.

A named professorship or chair enables us to attract and retain the best faculty. The David W. Wilson Chair in Business Ethics brought Donna J. Wood to the UNI campus, for instance. Donna’s presence here, in turn, drew attention to a faculty that is now internationally recognized for its strength in the area of business ethics and corporate social responsibility.

Each professorship or chair has its own story.

Ken McCormick Named Jepson Professor

With shrinking state support for higher education, we increasingly rely on the generosity of people who believe in UNI, the College of Business Administration and in preparing students for a global economy. Mr. Lawrence Jepson was one such person.

Lawrence Jepson was born in Denmark and immigrated to Iowa with his parents in the early 1900s. He attended Iowa State Teacher’s College and, while an undergraduate, was instrumental in creating the Cedar Falls Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Jepson founded Keystone Mutual Fund, which he ran until the late 1970s. After leaving Cedar Falls, he became a Wall Street businessman who was interested in how Iowa and the United States fit into the global framework.

UNI’s Lawrence M. Jepson Memorial Endowment was established in 1982 to improve the global understanding of our students and help them realize how the U.S. fits into the international environment. From that noble idea emerged the Lawrence Jepson Professorship in International Economics, which was awarded this spring to UNI Economics Professor Ken McCormick. Through the generosity of Mr. Jepson, Ken will be instrumental in internationalizing our campus, curriculum and students.

One of the activities of the Jepson Professor is a bilateral student seminar on international business, an exchange program with the Plekhanov Russian Academy of Economics (PRAE) in Moscow. Each spring, teams of five students and at least one faculty advisor from each university present papers to their respective Russian or American peers for critique and discussion during two separate seminars—the first at UNI, and the second at the PRAE. Experiences such as these broaden our students’ outlook and strengthen UNI’s global connections.

In addition to serving as the Jepson Professor, Ken McCormick teaches History of Economic Thought, Macroeconomics and Math for Economics. Ken has been a faculty member at UNI since his graduation in 1982 from Iowa State University with a Ph.D. in Economics—Public Finance. Ken received his B.A. in Economics and Urban Studies, with highest honors, from the University of California at Riverside.
UNI’s Financial Analysis Study Seminar is Coming to Des Moines

The Chartered Financial Analyst (CFA®) designation is the most respected credential for financial professionals seeking to establish their competence in investments. Many professionals prepare for the CFA® examinations by enrolling in CFA® study seminars offered by various commercial entities. The travel, lodging and tuition associated with these seminars can be costly. What’s more, the track record of such programs is uneven, at best.

In response, UNI Finance Professor Mir Zaman, holder of the prestigious Carl Schweser Financial Analysis Professorship, will deliver UNI’s remarkably successful CFA® study seminar in downtown Des Moines, March 16-18 and May 4-6, 2007. Off-site availability is made possible by Dr. G. Carl Schweser, US Bank and other contributors.

The CFA® study seminars, offered on the UNI campus since 2000, have resulted in a pass rate twice the national average. The seminar includes the Schweser study materials, lectures, discussions and simulated CFA® Level I exams. Attendees receive three hours of academic credit, which makes the seminar eligible for most employer tuition reimbursement programs.

Learn more about UNI’s CFA® Study Seminar by contacting Professor Zaman at mir.zaman@uni.edu, 319-373-2579 or by visiting www.cba.uni.edu/cfa. To register for the seminar, contact Bonnie Poley at bonnie.poley@uni.edu or 800-648-3864.

Honoring the Past while Supporting the Future

Other distinguished chairs and professorships have been established to honor those who have played a special part in the success of UNIBusiness over the years.

T. Wayne Davis Chair in Entrepreneurship
PETER GOULET
Management

Established by Adell Davis to honor her late husband, T. Wayne Davis, the chair supports entrepreneurship activities among faculty and students, continuing the tradition of support for small business that was so important to Mr. Davis.

David W. Wilson Chair in Business Ethics
DONNA J. WOOD
Management, Philosophy & Religion

David W. Wilson’s gift makes ethics a focus of teaching and research and helps students gain a perspective on ethics as a guide to decision-making in life and business.

Gaylon Halverson Professorship in Accounting
RON ABRAHAM, LEE NICHOLAS, LAVERNE ANDREESSEN, DARREL DAVIS
Inaugural holders of the professorship.

This endowment was established by our alumni to honor the strong tradition of excellence in Accounting education initiated under the leadership of Gaylon “Doc” Halverson.

Pioneer Hi-Bred International Professorship in Innovation
PROFESSOR LOU HONARY
Management

The Pioneer Professorship of Innovation was established by Pioneer Hi-Bred International to advance the bio-based lubricants industry.
Dear Alumni and Friends:

It’s a great time to be a panther.

With enormous pride, we say thank you to all of our alumni and friends who participated in the Students First campaign and helped us raise more than $112 million for the University of Northern Iowa. Without the generous support of many donors, including UNIBusiness alumni and friends, UNI would not be able to continue its tradition of excellence in education.

We are also grateful to UNIBusiness alumni who made our most recent Panther Phoneathon the most successful ever by contributing nearly $60,000. Please see Dean’s Fund for Excellence (below) for the impact your investment will have on our current students’ experience.

We hope you will take a moment to reminisce about your time here and reflect on the impact your UNI education continues to have on your life. We greatly appreciate your support today or through a future gift in your estate.

Sincerely,

Carrie Rankin, ’89
Director of Development
College of Business Administration

What is the Dean’s Fund for Excellence?

UNI students and faculty understand that today’s highly competitive global market requires preparation beyond a solid classroom education. Your contributions to the Dean’s Fund for Excellence provides the necessary financial support to help students build their professional edge. Here are several practical ways in which your gifts can make a difference:

• Funding a scholarship that permits a student to enroll in our intensive study seminar in preparation for the CFA® examination.

A student is willing to make the extraordinary commitment of time and energy required of seminar participants but can’t afford the associated fees. For several students, the Dean’s Fund has been the difference between a Level I CFA® designation and having no professional designation upon graduation.

• Funding an airplane ticket for a student who chooses to do an unpaid internship in one of our partner businesses in China.

A student forgoes the income and convenience of a local internship and is willing to live for a year in an unfamiliar environment, but can’t afford the cost of travel to China. The Dean’s Fund has enabled several students to embrace this opportunity and begin their careers with a professional advantage and a unique perspective on life.

• Funding a student organization’s participation in a rigorous academic competition.

Students are willing to invest the time and energy required to prepare for an academic competition (one group of students logged a total of 1,700 hours) but can’t afford the travel expenses. The Dean’s Fund has allowed several students to embrace this competitive challenge.

You can make a lasting difference in the lives of UNIBusiness students by giving generously to the Dean’s Fund for Excellence. To learn more about this fund, contact Farzad Moussavi, Dean of the College of Business Administration, at 319-273-6240 or Farzad.Moussavi@uni.edu.

Panther Phone Pledges

Each fall, UNIBusiness alumni receive calls from UNI collegians as part of our Panther Phoneathon fund drive. Last year, alumni donated a record-breaking $59,694. If you haven’t fulfilled your pledge, please do so today! If you didn’t receive a Panther call but would like to make a gift to the College of Business Administration, contact Jim Jermier, director of collegiate development for the UNI Foundation, at 319-273-7111, 800-782-9522, or Jim.Jermier@uni.edu. You can also make a donation online at www.cba.uni.edu/deansfund.
Bill Kimball Helps Create Global Connections

As a member of the Executive Advisory Board, Bill Kimball, strongly supported the College’s efforts to raise the profile of our international business programs. He did notice, though, that our students did not take full advantage of one significant opportunity. UNI attracts students from all over the world, many with business experience and connections in their home countries. But until students from Iowa and France and Lithuania and Malaysia get acquainted, they can’t start to learn from each other. The Bill Kimball Endowment for International Relations was established to begin the dialogue.

The endowment will support activities that raise the level of interaction between domestic and international students on campus. Preference will be given to activities sponsored by the International Club of Business Students, such as the new Global Associates program that pairs international and domestic students for mentorship and friendship.

The second segment of the endowment, The Bill Kimball Fund for International Development, will enhance the international experience of students and faculty during the next two years through international internships and international development programs. International internships will include a 12-month program in the Dalian Free Trade Zone in Dalian, China. An intensive international business seminar for graduate students offered by the Institut Supérieur du Commerce in Paris will also be supported.

Funds will also support one faculty member as he or she participates in an international professional development experience. Such opportunities allow faculty members to bring new insights back to the classroom giving UNIBusiness students a broader perspective on the world.

Bill Kimball is the retired president of Medicap Pharmacies, Inc. and a past College of Business Administration Executive Advisory Board member. He and his wife, Charlotte, live in Johnston. They have a son and daughter, both of whom attended UNI.

Wendell Crosser Honors His Mentor

Dr. Darrel Davis (right) retired from teaching last fall, but not before helping create one of the best Accounting programs in the country. Wendell Crosser (Accounting ’81), one of Dr. Davis’ former students and current CFO of Allied Insurance in Des Moines, recently established the Dr. Darrel Davis Accounting Scholarship Endowment to honor the educator who played such a key role in his life.

Scholarships made available through this endowment will be granted to academically accomplished students with financial need who are majoring in Accounting and are involved in the humanities and fine arts.

“You go down a lot of roads, and there are mentors along the way. Dr. Davis was one of those people,” said Wendell. “I’ve never met anybody who spent his time helping other people with really no focus on himself. I remember sitting in his class thinking, ‘I don’t know what college professors make, but this guy could make a whole lot more money doing something different.’ I was very thankful he was here. The guy is brilliant.”

Dr. Davis taught his last semester of classes in the fall of 2004 and officially retired in June 2005. He and his wife, Kay, moved near Rockford, Ill, to be closer to their family and grandchild.

With a goal of $300,000, Wendell made the initial $15,000 contribution to this ongoing scholarship; Allied Insurance in Des Moines contributed $30,000. “I encourage people to contribute in honor of Dr. Davis and take a minute to reflect on his contribution and how many people he helped,” said Wendell.

To support our international programs or the Davis Accounting Scholarship Endowment, please contact Jim Jermier, director of collegiate development for the UNI Foundation, at 319-273-7111, 800-782-9522, or Jim.Jermier@uni.edu.

UNIBusiness thanks Bill Kimball, Wendell Crosser and Allied Insurance for their generosity.
Thank You for Supporting UNIBusiness
You Came Through Again!

There are many ways to stay connected with UNI, but financial support remains one of the most important ways to help the College of Business Administration meet today's needs and prepare for the needs of tomorrow. Thank you!

The College of Business Administration is grateful to the many alumni and friends who, through their generous support, have demonstrated their commitment to excellence in business education.

Year-End Planning
As the end of the year approaches, take a look at your finances and consider making a tax-deductible contribution to your alma mater. Remember to check with your employer about matching gifts. You may be able to double or even triple the value of your contribution.
Tarek Fahmy (Management ’06) was one of four winners of the Four Hire! competition, hosted by the Greater Des Moines Business Partnership and the Des Moines Young Professionals’ Connection. In this “Apprentice”-like competition, candidates completed challenges that led to the ultimate goal of gaining a position at either The Des Moines Register, Principal Financial Services, Allied Insurance or Wells Fargo Financial, all in Des Moines. Tarek accepted a position as an outbound sales specialist at Wells Fargo.

Alicia Irons (Economics ’06) received the McElroy Trust Ph.D. Fellowship to help with graduate school expenses. The award of $10,000 per year for three years recognizes Alicia’s potential as a Ph.D. student. The fellowship is awarded annually to two graduates from the 10 colleges in northeast Iowa. Alicia is the sixth UNI recipient in the history of the fellowship and the fourth graduate from the Department of Economics. Previous awardees are Ted Juhl (’93), Adam Golombos (’98) and Nick Sly (’04).

As an undergraduate, Alicia was a Provost Scholarship recipient and a point guard for the UNI women’s basketball team.

Jason Jiskoot (Accounting ’06), received the Student Performance Award for the highest score of all student examinees in the U.S. and around the world on the Certified Management Accounts (CMA) exam. Jason was one of more than 4,000 examinees during the winter 2006 testing period.

“I put a lot of work into preparing for the exam, and it has been my experience that hard work rarely fails to lead to success,” said Jason.

Associate Professor Marty Wartick, acting head of the accounting department, said Jason’s performance on the CMA exam came as no surprise to Accounting faculty. “Jason is both intelligent and hardworking and provided leadership in virtually every class he took. He worked for the department as a tutor and served as a student member of the Accounting Advisory Council. I am confident he will be successful in his future endeavors.”

Jason works in the finance department at the Iowa-based Pella Corporation as the wood division budget analyst.

John Meyer (Accounting ’73) was the featured speaker at “An Industry Insider’s View of the WorldCom Crisis,” a Wilson Series in Business Ethics event held this spring in the Curris Business Building.
