Message from the Dean:
Cherishing the chance to compete in the freest economy in the world

Raymond Leung’s company, the Hopkins Education and Training Group, specializes in delivering international degree programs to the Hong Kong market. In May 2000, he invited a select group of international business schools to bring their MBA programs to Hong Kong. When the invitation arrived here, we had already decided to take our MBA program overseas, were seriously considering Hong Kong as the destination, and in a couple of days would be flying there for a first-hand look. Our response to that invitation was in line with Hong Kong’s fast-paced and direct business culture: “Can you meet with us in your Hong Kong office this coming Monday?”

Why overseas?
Our decision in 2000 to take our MBA program overseas responded to a pair of emerging developments: globalization of business and declining state support for higher education. We believed both to be lasting trends rather than passing fads. The former demanded increased international experience for our faculty. The latter required alternative sources of revenue. Exporting our MBA program seemed a step toward both objectives.

“Our partner immediately understood our position: as a public university we did not want Iowa taxpayers to have to invest even a penny in the program.”
Why Hong Kong?

Hong Kong’s traditional culture and modern infrastructure provide the exact mix of genuine international experience and convenient living conditions we sought for our faculty. With a vibrant economy — considered the freest in the world — the city also puts our faculty on the frontier of global business while offering us a large target market of English-speaking and upwardly mobile professionals. To top it all off, Hong Kong’s reputation for the best-run institutions in the world makes it a naturally appealing place to set up shop. Altogether, we could not think of a better choice for our purposes.

Why the Hopkins Group?

Our initial MBA class convened only 11 months after we first met Leung — a fast pace even for Hong Kong. The decision to work with the Hopkins Group was reinforced during the initial visit when Leung immediately understood our position: as a public university we did not want Iowa taxpayers to have to invest even a penny in the program. Leung absorbed all costs until we reached our break-even point, thus laying the foundation for a trusting and lasting relationship.

Ten years later

A decade has passed. Now we can confidently affirm that the Hong Kong initiative has fulfilled our objectives:

• A meaningful internationalization opportunity for over 40 faculty members. Beyond the initial experience, lasting relationships have been developed with individuals and organizations in the entire region, thanks to our highly mobile network of UNI Hong Kong MBA alumni.

• A steady source of revenue. The extra income has served a variety of purposes, but primarily we have invested it in professional development for our faculty and students.

The Hong Kong program has also tested our entrepreneurial capacity. We have cherished the chance to practice what we preach. UNIBusiness has carved out a respectable niche in a highly competitive market that we entered with absolutely no name recognition. Since then many global brands have entered — and exited.

Over the years, several UNIBusiness alumni have visited our Hong Kong classes. If you would like to see our operation for yourself and interact with professionals who are proudly pursuing a UNI degree some 8,000 miles from Cedar Falls, please let me know. We know the importance of overseas opportunities for our faculty and students, and would be remiss not to encourage our alumni as well!

ABOUT HONG KONG

For UNIBusiness, many factors make Hong Kong an ideal city in which to do business and to provide faculty with global business experience.

1. Freest economy in the world (Heritage Foundation and the Wall Street Journal)

2. Largest stock exchange in the world, as measured by the number of initial public offerings

3. Most popular business city in the world: 68 percent of the world’s largest companies have an office in Hong Kong (CB Richard Ellis)

4. English widely spoken as the official language and all signs are in English

5. One of the safest cities in the 21st Century (U.N. Habitat Report, 2007)

6. Open trade relationships with the U.S. and complete ideological and economic compatibility (U.S. State Department)

7. World’s best infrastructure (World Economic Forum)

8. World’s top city skyline (CNN International)
His journey in the hospitality industry started at the front desk in Malaysia. Along the way, Peter Liew (MBA ’04) picked up a UNI MBA, which helped launch him to his current position at the top of China’s luxury hotel business.

UNI*Business: You have spent your entire career in hospitality. How did you get your start in the hotel business?

Peter Liew: It started with a fire, literally. A neighbor bought a burned out hotel and offered me a job as a housekeeper and working the front desk. I was 17 at that time. I left the job to go to college but returned to the industry within a few years of graduation and haven’t strayed since.

UNI*Business: What do you like about the hotel business?

Peter Liew: I find the rush of working with different groups of people a thrill — from the guests, to the workforce, to owners and designers. As an industry that fulfills a fundamental need, it seems very basic and simple, but changing customer preferences and evolving social norms keep things interesting.

UNI*Business: What was your first hotel?

Peter Liew: I was the youngest controller working for the Holiday Inn group, and my youth and lack of ties meant I was the perfect candidate to travel to China’s “wild west.” In 1991, I moved to the city of Urumqi to open the first Holiday Inn in China’s remote northwest Xinjiang region.

UNI*Business: Why did you decide to pursue an MBA degree?

Peter Liew: At the time I was working at The Peninsula in Hong Kong. I was 40 years old, and my son was 2. It was time to update my skills, and I wanted to learn in an international learning environment. I also wanted to set an example for my son that learning is continuous.

UNI*Business: Why did you choose the UNI MBA program in Hong Kong?

Peter Liew: It took me more than two years to find the right MBA program to fit my needs — some are more focused on human resources, sales and marketing, or management, and I was looking for a broad program that could help me with hospitality. I also liked that my classmates came from a variety of backgrounds and industries, which meant that we were able to learn much from each other.
UNI Business: What part of the MBA curriculum proved most applicable to your current job?

Peter Liew: I still constantly refer to the product development studies we undertook as part of the curriculum because when each new hotel is designed and built, we have to look at it as a unique project, aiming to understand and meet the needs of a very specific market sector.

UNI Business: What is your latest project?

Peter Liew: I am now the general manager of Suzhou Jinghope Hotel Development Limited, a real estate development and industrial investment company responsible for a number of high profile projects in the city of Suzhou. I have been involved in the construction and opening of the InterContinental Suzhou, a luxury hotel located in the city's Suzhou Industrial Park.

UNI Business: How are you, as general manager of the development group, involved with InterContinental?

Peter Liew: Jinghope owns the hotel and appoints InterContinental to manage it at a fee based on performance. The deal includes the use of trademark and systems support from InterContinental. My role is to “bridge” the two parties, aiming to achieve a win-win situation. I need to understand the objectives and concerns of both industries and mitigate wastes of internal resources and handle conflicts within the partnership.

To obtain the trust and respect from both parties, it is important to demonstrate professionalism, integrity and knowledge in both hotel operation and hotel ownership.

UNI Business: How was the InterContinental Suzhou packaged and designed to appeal to its target market?

Peter Liew: The primary consideration was to build a five-star luxury hotel, but many factors that would affect the design had to be considered.

A location in the city’s business district meant that many people wanted to label it a business hotel, but I insisted on keeping the branding more broad to appeal to a wider range of potential customers. After all, the industrial park would have a residential population of 1.2 million with many family-oriented amenities and a high potential to attract leisure visitors and tourists.

To me, this meant the positioning of the hotel required consideration for two distinct target markets: it had to provide convenience, efficiency and connectivity for business travelers and still attract leisure travelers with its design and leisure facilities.

Another important consideration was the global nature of the businesses in the industrial park and the diverse national origins of people who work and live in the park. This meant the design would have to be open to multiple cultural influences while projecting a unified concept.

Overall, when we combined the preferences of the owner with these different considerations, a few key design characteristics emerged for the InterContinental Suzhou project: timeless, elegant and unpretentious with modern comfort and multiple cultural influences. In a tour of the completed hotel, I can show you how each and every one of these characteristics is incorporated.

Not the Average Park

InterContinental Suzhou is located in the Suzhou Industrial Park — a massive park befitting the scale and global nature of modern China.

- Joint venture between local Chinese and Singaporean interests.
- Population of 1.2 million.
- Global companies, especially in electronics, machinery, biomedicine and nanotechnology, bring a multi-national workforce.
Hong Kong may be a small island, but with its established financial regulation and proximity to mainland China, it has become a center of global capitalism. Not only is Hong Kong home to the most competitive job market in China, but also one of the most transient. A recent survey of employees reported that 38 percent of professionals in Hong Kong were planning to change jobs within the next six months.

Earning a UNI MBA in Hong Kong can be a great asset for those looking for an advantage in an increasingly competitive job market.

Entering the Entrepreneurial Arena

Emil Chan (’06) decided to embrace the culture of change in Hong Kong by broadening his horizons with an MBA from UNI. Since graduating, Chan has gone from a self-confessed “technology geek” working in a German bank, to a life of entrepreneurship. A few months ago, Chan and a partner started their own corporate training company while, at the same time, Chan serves as the managing director of Greater China Capital, Inc.

“My current project is to consolidate a Chinese technology company with two other technology companies in Canada and Finland,” he said.

For Chan, one of the major bonuses of the UNI MBA program in Hong Kong was a focus on networking, an area in which he had very little experience, but one that has since proved invaluable to his work in mainland China.

“China is different. Most international rules and practices won’t apply on the mainland,” he said. “In order to do good business in China, we must understand the culture, legal system and the importance of connections and networking.”

Like Chan, Christina Hau (’08) has an entrepreneurial side she needed to explore. After more than 10 years in the corporate sector, her decision to undertake further study was prompted by a desire to go into business for herself.

“I wanted to have more flexible work hours and develop my own path, so my husband and I decided to start our own business,” Hau said. “Being a young CEO and managing a company meant I definitely needed more knowledge to equip myself. I needed an MBA.”

Now a UNI MBA graduate, Hau is profuse in her praise of the program’s interactivity with both professors and classmates and says that though she often hears people complain about the stress of combining an MBA program with full-time work, she would have no hesitation in doing the whole thing over again.

“To me, the whole UNI MBA was a joyful experience. The program is professional and enjoyable,” she said. “I like that the program has course hours in which we can interact with real professors and classmates, unlike distance learning.”

Climbing the Corporate Ladder

It’s not just entrepreneurs who’ve benefited from the MBA program in Hong Kong. After two years as a management associate at Merrill Lynch and Citibank in Hong Kong, Amy Yeung (’04) decided that a bachelor’s degree, combined with hard work and enthusiasm just wasn’t enough to cut it as a successful banker and future manager in finance. She decided to pursue higher education and, after doing some research on MBA programs available in Hong Kong, Yeung decided to enroll in the UNI MBA program. She was drawn to the quality of faculty, the 12-month timeline and the curriculum. Since graduating in 2004, she says the impact of that decision has been nothing but positive.

“The advancements in my career wouldn’t have happened without my MBA degree,” Yeung said, without hesitation. A few months prior to graduating with her MBA, she was hired by a private bank to develop private and investment banking opportunities in China. Right after she graduated she was head-hunted by AIA lead Regional Bancassurance for Asia. “I still remember that the senior vice president at AIA spent the whole interview process asking me why I enrolled in the MBA program and what I had learned that would benefit me in the job.”

Now this busy mother of a 2-year-old girl (Yeung’s husband also works in the finance sector) is a regional senior manager whose day-to-day work includes business dealings with banks and insurance partners in a number of different countries. Yeung’s job is to provide her clients with what she describes as “sound financial management to help them grow their businesses and to satisfy their financial protection needs in Asia.”

Yeung said, “In a nutshell, my UNI MBA has played an important role in my fast-track career advancement.”

UNI MBA Hong Kong

UNI MBA Hong Kong’s presence around the world is expanding. Over the last decade, 163 students have graduated from the UNI MBA program in Hong Kong, which has drawn students from China to Canada, India, Israel, Korea and many more.
With UNIBusiness’ overseas MBA program, UNI’s faculty from the Iowa campus are immersed in a completely different culture and placed at the forefront of the global economy, where they often learn as much as they teach.

Over the last 10 years more than 40 faculty members have taken advantage of the opportunity to teach in Hong Kong and have brought their experiences back to the U.S. And while they get to spend two weeks in one of the most fascinating cities in the world, they put in a lot of work before, during and after their trip.

The same, but different

The UNI MBA program in Cedar Falls, Iowa, and Hong Kong are identical and designed for working professionals. But the preparation and the delivery differ as much as the locations. In Hong Kong, faculty members teach on-site during intense two-week sessions that include weekends and use eLearning methods prior to and following the on-site classes. In comparison, Cedar Falls classes are typically held once a week over the course of an 11-week trimester.

The courses are the same, but in Hong Kong faculty members often find they have to explain common U.S. concepts, such as plagiarism, remind students to speak in English and stay flexible with their examples and case studies.

As one of the first instructors in Hong Kong, associate professor of management Atul Mitra used examples and case studies that related to Hong Kong or China. He had a plethora to choose from given the area’s vibrant economy and business culture.

“I read about local happenings in the economy and used those examples to make the concepts relevant and put the lessons in context,” he said.

Steve Corbin, interim head of the Department of Marketing and associate professor, also does his homework to localize the students’ course work. 2011 marked his fifth trip to teach in Hong Kong, and through the years he has developed relationships with alumni who he’s brought back to the classroom. After a major CEO spoke to the class, Corbin subsequently assigned a real-world final project: a marketing development plan for that firm to be evaluated both by Corbin and the CEO.

“It made the course real for many students, and the outcomes were commendable,” he said. “It caused students to better appreciate the applicability of the material to real-life situations. It was a value-added experience for all parties involved.”

Beyond the classroom

Long-lasting relationships have been built over the 8,000-mile span between Cedar Falls and Hong Kong, and one of the best bonding experiences seems to be Sunday lunch. Traditionally, the MBA students take the instructor out for a big sit-down meal in the middle of their longest day of class for each session.
Muscatine Firm Supports Hong Kong’s Biggest Businesses

Take a look at Hong Kong’s famous skyline — one of the densest in the world. Imagine the number of individual offices there must be, and then imagine that it is an Iowa firm that furnishes a third of those offices. One of the world’s premiere business capitals works, eats and sleeps (when the boss isn’t around) on furniture produced by HNI Corporation, based in Muscatine, Iowa.

UNIBusiness alum Stan Askren (Management ’82) is chairman, president and CEO of HNI Corporation. The company is the world’s second-largest office furniture manufacturer and is the leader for workplace solutions in Hong Kong.

HNI’s leadership position in Hong Kong provides a strong foundation from which to drive investments and accelerate its already rapid growth in mainland China.

“Hong Kong is currently benefitting from Beijing’s preferential policies such as CEPA (Closer Economic Partnership Arrangement) and as the de facto settlement center for the Chinese Yuan,” explains Askren. “This makes Hong Kong a desirable location for multinationals with China aspirations and Chinese companies with global intentions.”

HNI operates a world-class manufacturing facility two hours south of Hong Kong, ideally located to support aggressive growth in China while serving discerning clients in Hong Kong.

“Going forward we expect China to be an important growth engine for HNI, and our leadership position in Hong Kong will play a vital role as we strive to become the ‘trusted leader’ for office furniture in all of Greater China,” Askren said.

The meals are served family-style with a lazy Susan at the center of the table.

“The students enjoyed making me eat delicacies, including chicken feet,” said associate professor of management and policy Jim Mattingly. While he enjoyed the experience, he doesn’t recommend that particular item.

The students made up for the chicken feet by telling Mattingly, who loves mangoes, where to get the best mango desserts.

Dealing with the elements

Keeping the curriculum on track isn’t always easy. Finance instructor Deb Giarusso was teaching Financial Management in Hong Kong during the fall of 2008 when a typhoon stormed in, cancelling the Tuesday evening class. She had to switch around some due dates and increase the intensity of the course schedule, but despite the cramped timeframe, they made it through the material.

It wasn’t wind and rain, but the weather still nearly derailed the first day of teaching in Hong Kong for UNIBusiness Dean Farzad Moussavi. It was a sweltering Sunday, with high heat and humidity that is typical during Hong Kong’s summer. The class met on the 41st floor of a steel and glass sky scraper. It was the first time classes were held in this building, and no one knew that since businesses don’t operate on Sundays, the air conditioning wasn’t running. The temperature began to rise, and Moussavi began to feel light-headed as the morning wore on.

“It was probably 100 degrees in that room that morning, and class was scheduled to go until 6 p.m.,” Moussavi said. “Fortunately, one of the students suggested we go to his house for the remainder of class.”

So Moussavi and the five students moved to the house of Tony Wu (’03) and gathered around the dining room table. After removing a painting, Moussavi’s lesson was projected onto a wall. Wu’s wife ordered them pizza from Pizza Hut for lunch and brought out Ben & Jerry’s ice cream later in the afternoon.

“I will not forget that day,” Moussavi said. “That morning was a painful personal experience, but it reflects the trials of an early entrant in a new market as well as the humble beginnings of our program. We started with only five students but now have a self-sufficient program that has carved out a comfortable niche in a competitive market.”
She’s young, soft-spoken and rather reserved at first blush, but Anesa Kajtazovic (’07) doesn’t shy away from a challenge.

From Bosnia to the Iowa Legislature

Kajtazovic graduated from the University of Northern Iowa in three years with a double major in management and public administration. She shrugs off the short time it took her, pointing out that she took advantage of summer classes, but fewer than two percent of UNI students complete their undergraduate degree in three years or less.

In January 2011, three and a half years after graduating from UNI, she started her first term in the Iowa Legislature. At 24, she became Iowa’s first Bosnian-born legislator and the youngest female state legislator. Kajtazovic is one of only 32 women in the Iowa Legislature, and she faces a generation gap — or two — between herself and many fellow legislators.

“In the Iowa Legislature, door attendants mistook the young representative for a page, a clerk and a visitor on more than one occasion. Often her status had to be verified by other legislators before she was allowed to pass."

Anesa Kajtazovic visits with fellow legislators in the House Chambers during the 2011 Iowa Legislative session. The way to her desk was blocked several times during the session: door attendants mistook the young representative for a page, a clerk and a visitor on more than one occasion. Often her status had to be verified by other legislators before she was allowed to pass.

In her effort to win against an incumbent candidate in the Democratic primary and against a former mayor in the 2010 general election, Kajtazovic knocked on more than 7,000 doors and made more than 2,000 phone calls while holding down her full-time job as a mortgage analyst at GMAC Mortgage in Waterloo, Iowa. After her victory, she then had to balance her job with the third-longest legislative session in state history: it lasted 172 days, nine weeks past the scheduled adjournment.

Kajtazovic says she had the discipline to accomplish all that was on her plate because she’s passionate about the issues she ran on — education, economic development and job growth — and helping her community.

“I’m just very driven and motivated,” Kajtazovic said. “Some of that comes from seeing the struggles of my parents and other people. I just think I’m lucky to have these opportunities and can’t imagine not taking advantage of them.”
It runs in the family

Kajtazovic was born in western Bosnia in 1986. When conflict came to her family’s region in the late 1990s, she, her parents and her sister left the war-torn country and spent four months in a refugee camp before being granted asylum in the U.S. and moving to Waterloo in 1997. Approximately 4,000 to 5,000 Bosnian refugees live in the Waterloo-Cedar Falls area.

In Bosnia, Kajtazovic’s father worked in marketing at a bank. He wore suits to work and traveled internationally. In Waterloo, with limited resources and a language barrier, he struggled to find employment before taking a manual-labor job. He also worked odd jobs on the side to help his daughters through school.

“He went from having such a good job to having to get jobs he probably never imagined he’d have to do,” she said.

UNI and the future

Kajtazovic became a U.S. citizen in 2004 and graduated from Waterloo’s West High School and began her studies at UNI that same year. Whether she’s helping homeowners stay in their homes through her job at GMAC Mortgage or researching bills and policies in Des Moines, she says her UNI education prepared her well.

“I can’t imagine where I would be now or who I would be without my education at UNI,” she said. And while she admits that it was challenging at times, she doesn’t have any regrets. “Even though there were classes I wish I would’ve gotten better grades in, I tried my best.”

As Kajtazovic thinks about her future, she says she’ll stay involved in politics and the community, but would also like to explore the business side of her education a little more, maybe fulfill some entrepreneurial aspirations some day. However, she’s hesitant to state any concrete plans.

“Everything in my life has happened so fast. Even just in the last year I never dreamed all this would happen,” she said. “I can’t imagine five years from now …”

But what Kajtazovic does know is that she’ll continue to work hard in all that she does and stay open to all that comes her way.

“I can’t imagine where I would be now or who I would be without my education at UNI.”

Economics Senior Wins Leadership Award

Ryan Mahaffey (Economics ’11) received the Alliant Energy Erroll B. Davis Jr. Achievement Award, which recognizes academic achievement in engineering or business administration, leadership in campus and community organizations, and potential for future career success. Mahaffey was an active leader at UNI in and outside the classroom. Captain of the UNI football team with several MVC awards under his belt, he also managed a 3.60 and participated in the UNIBusiness Undergraduate Research Program.

Economics Major’s Business Named One of “America's Coolest College Start-Ups”

Book Hatchery, a business started by Nick Cash (Economics and Computer Science), was named one of “America's Coolest College Start-Ups of 2011” by Inc. Magazine. Cash also won the 2011 Prometheus Awards Student Innovation of the Year for Book Hatchery. The honor is given out by the Technology Association of Iowa and sponsored by LWBJ Financial.

Book Hatchery (www.bookhatchery.com) is located in UNI’s John Pappajohn Entrepreneurial Center’s Student Business Incubator. It enables authors to self-publish their work and make it available for purchase and downloading on all major eReading devices, such as the Amazon Kindle, Apple iPad, Barnes and Noble Nook, and Sony Reader.

Instructor Opens UNIBusiness Legal Advice Clinic

Active attorney and Iowa State Bar Association member Heidi Noonan-Day, also an instructor of management in the UNI College of Business Administration, now offers free initial legal consultations to UNIBusiness students, faculty and staff.

Mitra’s Research Among 10 Most Important Contributions to HR Field

UNI associate professor of management Atul Mitra’s research on the meaning of pay raises was considered one of the 10 most important contributions to the field based on a WorldatWork survey. Moreover, Mitra’s work was ranked second in human resource practitioners’ familiarity with the findings. WorldatWork is the most influential association for human resource professionals.
Student-athlete Honored for Academics and Athletics

Beth Discher (Accounting ’10, MAcc ’11) was named one of the inaugural recipients of the Missouri Valley Conference (MVC) Elite 18 Award. The Elite 18 Award goes to the top scholar athletes in their respective sports.

UNI’s Pi Sigma Epsilon Wins Gold Chapter Award at Nationals

For the second time in three years, UNI’s chapter of Pi Sigma Epsilon (PSE), Epsilon Theta, won the Lewis F. Gordon Top Gold Chapter award at the PSE National Convention in April 2011. This award, the highest recognition bestowed to a PSE chapter, was accepted by 33 members of Epsilon Theta who represented the College and participated in the convention. Additionally, the group received the inaugural PSE Presidents Award for the betterment of Pi Sigma Epsilon by helping three universities establish PSE chapters.

Supply Chain Students Place in Top Three at National Industry Competition

UNI Business Supply Chain Management students placed third at the 2011 Operation Stimulus competition in Denver. The competition was part of Colorado’s 30th Annual Transportation Forum presented by the Denver Transportation Club. This year’s team consisted of: Emily Althoff (Management), Jessica Grandgenett (Management ’11), Tim Steffensmeier (Management ’11), Paula Throndson (Management and Spanish ’11), and Lisa Zanotti (Management ’11).

Professor’s ‘Classic Work’ Honored by Journal of Business Ethics

PI Sigma Epsilon Makes Global Clothing Donation in Jamaica

In November 2010, Epsilon Theta, UNI’s chapter of Pi Sigma Epsilon (PSE), donated school supplies and T-shirts to students at the New Vision School in Runaway Bay, Jamaica.

Spring Break in the Cedar Valley

Several UNI Business students skipped Cabo and used spring break to add professional experience to their résumés. The new Spring Break in the Cedar Valley internship program places students in top Cedar Valley organizations to shadow company executives, put professional skills to practice and build their networks. This year’s participants:

Jessica Grandgenett (Management ’11) spent 20 hours at Ferguson Enterprises. Grandgenett worked in the company’s distribution center with the supervisory group and got an overview of the company’s network and background information.

Afton Harvey (Accounting and Marketing) spent two days of her break at ME&V Advertising. Harvey spent one day shadowing and working with the Media Department manager, and another day shadowing and working with the Fundraising Department.

Brian Bowles (Marketing) learned the ropes of economic development at the Greater Cedar Valley Alliance with President & CEO Steve Dust. After his spring break experience, Bowles was offered, and accepted, a communications internship with the alliance.

Collins-Williams Named ‘Woman of Innovation’

Maureen Collins-Williams, director of UNI’s Regional Business Center was the recipient of the Government Agency/Nonprofit Innovation and Leadership Award at the Technology Association of Iowa’s Women of Innovation program.
More than 90 percent of UNIBusiness students are from Iowa, and few have ever been outside the U.S. UNIBusiness aims to provide financially accessible international opportunities to students and faculty alike, broadening horizons and providing skills to compete in today’s global business market.

Facetime, not Facebook: UNI Students in China

When Heath DeForest (Business Teaching) started college, he never imagined that he would travel to China, see the sites, visit multi-national corporations, and make friends around the globe.

But then he enrolled in UNIBusiness’ Global Skills Capstone course, which takes UNIBusiness students to Dalian, China, where they study with students from Brazil, China, Colombia and Poland.

“I may never have the opportunity to do something like it again in my lifetime,” he said.

UNIBusiness developed this course to provide opportunities for multi-national interaction and first offered it in 2009. The first year it included 17 students from UNI and Dalian Nationalities University. In 2011 it had grown to include 35 students from five countries.

“Cultural competency is a critical 21st century business skill best learned outside the classroom,” said instructor of marketing and program coordinator Chris Schrage. “The students learn how to deal with other people, viewpoints and customs.”

The students take 20 hours of language training and tour global companies such as Coca-Cola and Mabuchi Motors in China to get a sense of different work standards and expectations. They also learn through experiences not on the formal agenda.

“Not being able to use Facebook in China and seeing government censorship was very eye-opening,” Schrage said. The students may have been aware of the restrictions prior to their visit but didn’t fully comprehend the implications until experiencing it firsthand.

After the course, some students hope to return to China, others are anxious to travel to other new friends’ home countries (Brazil, Colombia or Poland), and all are grateful for what they’ve learned and had the opportunity to do.

“My trip to China was an unbelievable experience that I will treasure for the rest of my life,” DeForest said.

UNIBusiness thanks Bill & Charlotte Kimball for their support of our international programs.
During her last semester at UNI, Kristi Philips (Economics and Spanish ’11) needed some extra credit hours to maintain fulltime status. So she signed up for independent study and worked as an intern with a non-profit UNI student organization dedicated to providing assistance to the Matagalpan region of Nicaragua.

Philips spent a semester exploring ways that Zona Franca Masili, a sewing co-op in Nicaragua, could improve production efficiency and product marketing.

The co-op is primarily made up of women displaced after Hurricane Mitch struck the Matagalpan region in 1998. The members built the company from scratch and produce textiles made of 100-percent organic cotton and sell them in the U.S. and Europe. The co-op was the first in Nicaragua to be certified by the World Fair Trade Organization.

In May 2011, Philips spent two weeks in Nicaragua working directly with Zona Franca Masili members. She translated emails and conference calls; took photos for promotional materials; presented a basic business seminar and proposed a business plan for the co-op.

“Most of the co-op members haven’t even finished high school,” Philips said. “They have a lot of pride in their work. They took a huge risk in trying to start this up, and had a lot of road blocks along the way. It was great to see how dedicated they were.”

Philips is now pursuing a master’s degree in Latin American and Caribbean studies at New York University.

Scholarships Make it Possible

Philips received the new UNIBusiness Scholarship for Social Engagement for her internship. The scholarship was created to remove the financial impediment of unpaid internships and encourage students to use their business knowledge to improve the world. The scholarship is available to UNIBusiness students who complete an internship with a non-profit organization whose mission clearly outlines a social purpose and serves the public interest. The internship work must have a clear relationship to the business function of the organization.

Thanks Gene (Marketing ’60) and Mary Anne Dietz for their generous contributions to the Dietz Family Student Professional Development Fund.
FACULTY RECOGNITION

Delivering essential business knowledge and instilling traditional work values requires outstanding faculty willing to demand the best of themselves and of their students.

Mark Bauman, McGladrey Professor of Accounting
Faculty Teaching Award
sponsored by Tim Williams (Accounting ’71) in memory of LaVerne Andreessen

The new undergraduate- and graduate-level courses that Mark Bauman has designed draw on his professional experience with the Securities and Exchange Commission and his academic research.

Mary Christ, associate professor of accounting
Faculty Service Award
sponsored by Gaylen (Accounting ’72) and Glenna Miller

Sarah Sorenson, assistant professor of management
Faculty Innovation Award
sponsored by David (Management ’81) & Cynthia (Elementary Education ’80) Petratis

Jeff Stokes, associate professor of finance
Outstanding Junior Faculty Award
sponsored by University Book & Supply

NEW FACULTY

Demand for professors with Ph.D.s in business far exceeds supply. UNIBusiness ups the ante by only seeking those faculty who have a passion for teaching and can transfer their practical experiences and academic expertise into an exciting classroom environment. UNIBusiness welcomes seven new faculty members who fit the bill.

Accounting

Assistant professor Eric Lee, CPA, completed his Ph.D. from Washington State University. He has an undergraduate accounting degree from Australian National University and a MAcc degree from SUNY-Binghamton. His professional experience includes work as an auditor for Coopers & Lybrand in Singapore and as a finance and operations development coordinator for G5 International Holdings in Saskatchewan, Canada. His dissertation research focuses on how environmental sustainability issues impact a company’s objectives.

Assistant professor Joel Pike, a licensed CPA, received his Ph.D. in accounting from the University of Wisconsin-Madison and his bachelor of science in accounting from the Carlson School of Management at the University of Minnesota. He has prior teaching experience at the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana. His professional background includes work as an auditor for Coopers & Lybrand in Minneapolis.
Finance

Assistant professor Adam Smedema completed his Ph.D. from Florida State University with a concentration in finance and support econometrics. His research interests include empirical asset pricing, idiosyncratic risk, portfolio theory, derivatives, corporate flexibility and cash holdings. His teaching interests include investments, derivatives, business statistics and mathematics, and financial and capital budgeting. Smedema received his B.A. in political science from the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Management

Assistant professor Russell Guay received his Ph.D. in organizational behavior/human resources from the University of Iowa. He received an MBA and B.A. in management from Northern Illinois University. His research focuses mostly on leadership and employee work attitudes. Guay taught in the undergraduate and MBA programs at Iowa and has taught leadership workshops to groups of executives. He also has 10-plus years of human resources experience in the manufacturing, hospitality and consulting industries, and is PHR certified.

Marketing

Matthew Wilson has 15 years of professional experience in interactive advertising, experiential marketing and interactive product development. He was creative director of Mudd Advertising prior to joining the UNI faculty and prior to that ran his own ad agency in New York City. Wilson, a native of Cedar Falls, Iowa, received a B.A. from Kansas City Art Institute and master’s of fine arts degree in creative design from Yale University.

In 2004, Wilson worked as a creative consultant for New Zealand-based WETA Workshop on the pre-production of Peter Jackson’s King Kong. Working with the art and production design teams in New Zealand, he provided historical design research in coordination with New York’s cultural institutions.

Tom Cummings has more than 30 years of industry experience with John Deere, serving as sales and marketing manager for both internal and external product markets for more than two decades. His experience includes working in the areas of Division Sales Management, Worldwide Demand Planning and Order Forecast Management, Marketing Management, External Regional Sales Management, Internal Sales Account Management, New Product Development Engineering, Capital Budgeting Management, Manufacturing Engineering and Materials Engineering. Cummings has a master’s in engineering from Iowa State University, and received his B.A. from the University of Dubuque. He also completed the John Deere Development Programs, which include 218 hours of training in finance, business management, sales management, global marketing planning, executive speaking, production systems and performance management. He was an adjunct instructor for UNIBusiness from 2007-2009.

Rebounds to Regression Analysis: Alum Returns to Teach

Instructor of economics Alicia Rosburg (Economics ’06) is completing her Ph.D. in economics at Iowa State University in environmental economics. Her research has focused heavily on bio-fuels as alternatives to fossil-based fuels. Rosburg received her B.A. in economics from UNI — the same program in which she’s teaching. As an undergraduate student at UNI, Rosburg earned the Mahmood Yousefi Scholarship and the prestigious McElroy Fellowship.

Rosburg played on the Panther women’s basketball team from 2002-2006, helping the Panthers rack up 19 wins and earn a bid to the WNIT tournament during her senior year.

Panther Phone-a-thon Fund Drive Results
Each year, UNIBusiness students call alumni to invite them to contribute to the Dean's Fund for Excellence. This fund allows the College to offer scholarships and extracurricular opportunities to help more of our students start their careers with a professional edge and a global perspective.

Thanks to your generosity, $68,065 was raised during the 2010-2011 phone-a-thon, a 7 percent increase from last year. If you still need to fulfill your pledge or would like to make an additional gift to UNIBusiness, contact Development Director Michelle Rouke at 800-782-9522, 319-273-4444 or michelle.rouke@uni.edu. You also can give online at business.uni.edu/deanfund.
Greetings to all UNI Business alumni and friends and special thanks to those who have provided support for the College of Business Administration this year.

Many of the alumni I have met have asked about my fundraising work in light of recent economic conditions, so I will take this opportunity to share an update with you. During Homecoming 2010 we held the public kick-off for the Imagine the Impact Campaign for the University of Northern Iowa, announcing our goal to raise $150 million by 2013. At the end of FY11, we have more than $130 million in gifts and pledges to create new scholarships, fund faculty professorships and fellowships, and support academic programs.

Even through the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression, UNI alumni and friends have kept our alma mater a priority in their charitable giving. While national trends in philanthropy showed declines in alumni-giving rates, Panthers stepped up with record gifts.

With your help, we will achieve our campaign goal. Whether you make a gift for immediate use or you create an endowment to generate perpetual support, you will have a lasting impact on UNI Business students and faculty. Program and scholarship support, the Dean’s Fund for Excellence, the UNI Annual Fund and Old Central Associates (those who have created a legacy for the future with a planned gift) are all ways you can participate.

To quote business history author Miriam Beard, “The results of philanthropy are always beyond calculation.” As we continue to track the financial progress of the Imagine the Impact campaign, we can only dream about how much good our gifts are going to do for the long-term growth and mission of UNI. Thanks very much for doing your part.

To learn more about making an impact for UNI Business students and programs, please contact me at 800-782-9522, 319-273-4444 or michelle.rourke@uni.edu.

AEGON Transamerica Foundation Gives $300,000 for CFA Exams and International Programs

A $300,000 endowment from the AEGON Transamerica Foundation will support students preparing to take the Chartered Financial Analyst (CFA) exam and students who want to study abroad or participate in international internships.

“Professional certifications and overseas experiences help our students become better prepared for careers with global businesses like AEGON,” said UNIBusiness Dean Farzad Moussavi. “Gifts such as this remove the financial barriers that can deter students from pursuing international and professional opportunities. We’re grateful to the AEGON Transamerica Foundation for making such opportunities available.”

In the U.S. the AEGON/Transamerica companies employ nearly 200 UNI graduates in accounting, real estate, finance and information technology.

“We’re honored and excited to be a part of making meaningful opportunities like this possible,” said AEGON Transamerica Foundation President David Blankenship.

Art and Accounting Blend at UNI

A career in accounting has allowed Lois E. Iseminger (Accounting ’71) to fulfill her passion in art.

Iseminger became a Certified Public Accountant in 1972 and received her MBA from the University of Chicago in 1982. From 1989 to 2004, she owned Iseminger & Associates and since 2004 has worked for Poulos & Baker specializing in auditing, taxation and quality control.

She is a long-time art collector who chose to donate her collection to the UNI Gallery of Art. In September 2011, Iseminger gave the opening lecture to the exhibition, “Turning Point: New Acquisitions from the UNI Permanent Art Collection,” which featured some of the art that once adorned her home. Approximately 30 pieces from the collection now hang in the Curris Business Building.

Shimkat’s Bequest Creates Largest Accounting Scholarship Endowment to Date

David Shimkat (Accounting ’71) was grateful for the accounting education he received at UNI. It served him well in his career — so much so that he made a provision in his will to make the UNI Business accounting department a beneficiary of his estate. Upon his death in 2010, his gift established the David B. Shimkat Scholarship Endowment — the program’s largest scholarship endowment to date.

Those who knew Shimkat recall his fondness for UNI accounting professors Darrell Davis and Laverne Andréassen. His estate gift is a perpetual reminder of how great teaching and mentoring influence students’ future decisions to give back.

Over the years, Shimkat supported the Accounting Fund for Excellence and the UNI Business Dean’s Fund for Excellence. He also made a significant gift to help establish the Gaylon Halverson Endowed Professorship.

Shimkat was born on June 22, 1949, in Fort Dodge, Iowa. His UNI accounting degree led to a 30-year career with Xerox. In retirement, Shimkat volunteered with several non-profit organizations. He died Dec. 23, 2010.

Paying It Forward — Dennis B. Mullen Endowed Student Professional Development Fund

Without scholarships, Dennis Mullen (Accounting ’66) would not have been able to attend college. And without the encouragement of his UNI Business professors, especially accounting professors James Blanford and Gaylen “Doc” Halverson, he would never have completed an internship at PwC.

Now Mullen is paying it forward with the establishment of the Dennis B. Mullen Endowed Student Professional Development Fund. The two-year fund will have a broad impact the first year by providing professional skills training for a large number of students, and a deep impact the next year on an individual student pursuing a professional certification (e.g., financial analyst, public accounting, global business professional).

Mullen, originally from Charles City, Iowa, worked at John Deere while a student at UNI. He joined PwC after graduation and then became chief financial officer for Lange Ski Boots. He went on to a successful career as a corporate executive in the restaurant industry, serving as CEO for several restaurant chains. He recently retired from Red Robin Gourmet Burgers. He has served on the Janus Funds Board of Trustees for 40 years.

He credits UNI as the springboard for everything he did in his career and that is why he gives back.

“I hope others will consider doing something similar,” he said.
First Lady Speaks at Historic UNI Commencement

During 2011 UNI Commencement, first lady Michelle Obama encouraged graduates to retain their Iowa values and reminded them they didn’t have to look far for inspiration and examples. Among the 2011 UNI graduates, and the alumni who came before them, Obama singled out three UNIBusiness graduates — Nancy Aossey (Marketing ’82, MBA ’84), Ali Farokhmanesh (Finance ’10) and Nadine Ishimwe (MIS ’11) — to illustrate the “kaleidoscope of talents, passions and experiences” UNI students and graduates have to offer.

Below are excerpts from Obama’s 2011 UNI Commencement address, in which she shared the inspiring stories of these UNIBusiness alumni.

Nadine Ishimwe
And we’ve got graduates like Nadine Ishimwe, who survived the Rwandan genocide as a child and came to Cedar Falls four years ago when she couldn’t even read, write, or speak English.

Ali Farokhmanesh
At the end of the day, don’t ever lose sight of what makes you unique. Don’t ever stop believing in what you have to offer. Don’t ever count yourself out. And if you ever do begin to doubt yourself, if you ever start to wonder whether you can fulfill all those dreams, I want you to think of two words that showed this country that young people here at UNI have got what it takes. Those words? ‘Ali Farokhmanesh.’

Nancy Aossey
And then there’s Nancy Aossey. Nancy grew up in Cedar Rapids, dreaming of faraway countries and peoples. She got her B.A. and her MBA at UNI in the early ’80s, and then took a job selling phones. She went out to California, where she heard about a small startup nonprofit called International Medical Corps, an organization that worked in those faraway lands, responding to emergencies and helping local residents become self-reliant. She asked if they needed a volunteer, and it turned out they needed a CEO. So Nancy listened to her heart. She took over, and IMC took off. All told, they’ve directed more than a billion dollars in assistance and training worldwide. They’ve touched millions of lives, from Somalia, to the Balkans, to Haiti and Japan. And as CEO, Nancy has earned awards that put her in the company of presidents, generals, Nobel Prize recipients and Oscar winners.

A named faculty position honors both the generosity of the donor who establishes the position and the contributions of the professor who holds it. But students are the ultimate beneficiary. The proceeds from donor gifts allow UNIBusiness faculty to develop new educational opportunities, generate direct financial support for students and help bring outstanding faculty to campus and keep them here.

Dennis Schmidt Named Deloitte Accounting Fellow

Accounting professor Dennis Schmidt has been awarded the Deloitte Accounting Fellowship in recognition of his outstanding scholarship, teaching and service.

With the leadership of Jeff Provost (‘84), nine accounting alumni who work at Deloitte pulled together to establish the Deloitte Accounting Faculty Fellowship. In addition to Provost, Amber Carman (‘94), Matthew Davis (‘90), Kim Felker (‘93), Jason Flinn (‘97), Aaron Grundman (‘92), Mick Kane (‘91), Christine Terhark (‘92) and Debra Warner (‘95) founded the fellowship to help the accounting department attract and retain quality faculty.

UNI Business thanks the generous alumni partners at Deloitte who established this fellowship and the Deloitte & Touche Foundation for the matching gifts.

Whether it’s a small operation or a multi-billion dollar international company, risk management is a critical part of doing business. At the first UNIBusiness-John Deere Supply Chain Forum, held April 13, 2011, Jeff Quint (Accounting ’85), founder of Cedar Ridge Winery & Distillery, and Kent Miller, global director of supply management for the Agriculture & Turf Division, John Deere, discussed their operations’ business and supply chain risk management strategies with UNIBusiness students and faculty and industry professionals.

The forum concluded with team presentations based on a case study developed by a group of John Deere supply chain professionals and UNIBusiness students.

Teams discussed the case, which was based on the real-life aftermath of the March 11, 2011, earthquake and tsunami that hit Japan. The teams then laid out a plan for the best solution and presented to the larger group, after which Miller discussed John Deere’s actual response and situation with Japanese suppliers.

UNIBusiness thanks the John Deere Foundation for its support of our supply chain management program and Bill Kimball for creating the Bill Kimball Endowment for International Relations, which supports UNIBusiness Global Associates.
A UNIBusiness graduate’s competitive advantage? The unique combination of traditional work values, essential business knowledge and contemporary professional skills. Our students come to us with the traditional work values of a Midwest background. Our world-class faculty deliver the essential business knowledge. And our new Professional Readiness Program equips graduates with the contemporary professional skills, from email etiquette to team organization, to hit the ground running.

Open your eyes, roll up your sleeves

Cultivating a Culture of Achievement  by Dale Cyphert

In its first year as a requirement for UNIBusiness freshmen and sophomores, the Professional Readiness Program (PRP) opened students’ eyes to the possibilities that lie ahead and required them to roll up their sleeves to learn the skills they’ll need for career success.

Opening their eyes

Whether they are C-level executives or recent UNIBusiness graduates, alumni who share their stories earn the students’ attention. Their personal, inspiring insights help students understand the significance of the professional skills they are gaining through the PRP.

Other “aha” moments come during employer-provided workshops. During one event a sophomore sat near an employer, a recent alumnus, a faculty member and two senior-level students who were discussing differences between the company’s matrix organization and the principles taught in Organizational Management, as well as the implications for the company’s marketing strategy. The young man barely had a clue what the conversation was about, but his look was one of mystified anticipation. The conversation opened his eyes to where his academic work and professional application would intersect.

Rolling up their sleeves

Once their eyes have been opened, the students want to know how to do what they need to do. Hands-on, interactive activities instill confidence in their career preparation.

Throughout the PRP, students learn from corporate trainers, receiving the same training that employees do about organizing effective teams, time management techniques, professional email, and other real-world topics. Small numbers in the meetings facilitate hands-on learning.

Putting it all together

With just the second group of freshmen entering the program this year, it’s still too early to judge the career impact, but some faculty members have already noticed a shift. Associate professor of management Sue Wurtz, who teaches human resources courses, says students are speaking up more confidently in class.

And a student who stepped up to lead a project team commented to marketing instructor Tom Cummings that he was using skills from the PRP, and without those workshops he wouldn’t have had the confidence to give the leadership role a try.

There is no question that a culture of achievement has surfaced at UNIBusiness.

UNIBusiness thanks  the alumni, corporate representatives and business leaders who work directly with students and those who lend their organizations’ professional trainers and executives to deliver cutting-edge professional training to our students.
After speaking to students in the Professional Readiness Program, HNI Corporation President and CEO Stan Askren (Management ’82) discusses the issues and trends affecting HNI with faculty.

Faculty Do Lunch With an Executive

Business professionals visiting campus for the PRP seminars don’t just share their insights with students. Our new Lunch with an Executive program invites these professionals to sit down with our faculty and, in a casual, open setting, talk about their lives and business decisions.

Lunch with an Executive puts faculty in the room with top-level business men and women, bringing theory to life, providing a unique forum for exchange between the academy and the business world and keeping both sides sharp. This exchange is in line with the College’s traditional emphasis on delivering a practical, applied education — essential business knowledge.

Professional Readiness Program Executives in Residence

The PRP team has added three experienced business professionals to its forces. Their job is to provide continuity for the students in PRP Levels I and II, tie together lessons from week to week and relate those lessons to on-the-job experiences students may encounter.

Tom Cummings, retired manager of World Wide Demand Planning for John Deere Power Systems and current instructor of marketing

Cynthia Goro, president of The Worthington Partnership, LLC., and adjunct instructor of management

Martin Hansen, inside sales manager for Martin Brothers

Professional Readiness Support Network

A distinguishing feature of the Professional Readiness Program is the direct involvement of UNI Business alumni, business partners and working professionals who assist with the development of young professionals by speaking to classes, leading training workshops, attending networking events and hosting student visits. You can view a complete list at business.uni.edu/readinessprogram/supporters.

Highlights from the Class of 2011 Celebration Q&A session with this year’s undergraduate Alumni in Residence:

Q: What characteristics do you look for in an ideal employee?
A: Drive for results. Realize that your attitude resonates in everything you do. - Leese

Q: How should I go about finding a mentor?
A: Pick mentors with qualities you like. Much mentoring takes place just through observation. - Engel

Q: What do you wish you’d have done differently in college?
A: Study abroad. Take advantage of the opportunities the university offers. Those who are graduating, see if your employer offers any overseas opportunities. - Hemphill

Q: What was one of the biggest challenges you faced as you got your first job, and how did you overcome it?
A: I had no idea what I wanted to do. So I figured out what I was good at, stuck with it and ended up doing what I loved. - Hutcheson

Q: How do you set yourself apart when looking for a job?
A: Brand yourself. Know what your competition is doing so you can voice what sets you apart. - Hesse

Founding Dean, Best-selling Author Returns to UNI Business

A warm welcome from students, faculty and alumni awaited Robert Waller (Marketing ’62, M.A. ’64), founding dean of the UNI College of Business Administration, when he returned to campus in October 2011.

During his visit, Waller noticed the changes in technology that allow different educational delivery methods, but was pleased to see that those developments had not altered the foundation of hard work and high expectations he had established 30-plus years ago.

Waller, who joined the UNI faculty in 1968, was a well-respected, influential educator during his 21 years at UNI. Since taking leave from UNI in 1989, he has written six novels in addition to the best-seller The Bridges of Madison County, which he wrote while at UNI.

Waller’s new book, The Summer Nights Never End ... Until They Do: Life, Liberty, and the Lure of the Short-Run, is forthcoming from Traders Press.
A Successful Student Does More Than Attend Class.

When a student wants to study abroad to learn more about international businesses and customs, wants to take classes to earn professional certifications before graduation, wants to take an unpaid internship that will apply business knowledge to help the community, we want to help.

Your contributions to the Dean’s Fund for Excellence can purchase airline tickets, buy CFA seminar books, fund a scholarship and much more.
